Laser/SIPL

Frequently Asked Questions

What body areas can I have treated?

The only area we cannot treat is around the eyes. Any other area of the body can be treated....fast! Permanent hair removal around the eye, such as eyebrows, should be treated with Electrolysis.

What should I expect after the treatment?

Most people experience some mild redness and tenderness in the treated area shortly after the treatment. This does not interfere with normal activities and usually subsides within a few hours. In some cases, the redness may last longer; but will be mild and temporary.

Are there any possible side effects?

You may experience some short-term effects; these may include slight reddening of skin or local swelling or welting, which lasts only a few hours. On rare occasions some blistering may occur; but typically resolves quickly. Also, skin can become darker or lighter following the treatment, but will generally return to normal within a few weeks. Limiting sun exposure before and after treatments will minimize the risk of complications.

Do I need to do anything after the treatment?

You can return to work the same day and resume all regular activities. Only shave the area if needed between treatments. Do not wax, pluck or use any depilatory creams. You should limit sun exposure and use a sun screen, which is always good practice.

How many treatments will I need?

SIPL technology has been proven to create a permanent reduction in the number of regrowing hairs following each treatment in most skin types; however; there are many factors that will determine how many treatments you will need. For example: Your hair colour, texture and density, your skin colour and the area to be treated. We would say approximately 4 to 6 treatments as an average, but a customized program will be designed for you along with an estimate of how many treatments you may need in order to meet your expectations. Any hair with at least some pigment in it (black, brown, red and even blonde) can be treated.

Electrolysis how does it work?

The hair follicle is a tube like depression of the skin that contains each hair. The Dermal Papilla is actually a part of the follicle and controls the growth and development of the hair. Tweezing or waxing will remove the hair shaft but the dermal papilla still remains.

Electrolysis is the process of removing hair permanently by means of electricity. The term 'Electrolysis' has become synonymous with both the multiple needle galvanic method and the more modern single needle short-wave method. A fine probe follows the hair shaft to the dermal papilla; at the same time a special type of electrical current destroys the papilla. The loosened hair shaft is then removed

Removing fallacies and myths about Electrolysis

Can electrolysis damage the skin?

Skin will not be damaged in the hands of an experienced, qualified professional. The texture of the skin will be finer and velvety when the pores are no longer held open by the blunt end of the hair.

Is electrolysis painful?

This is a common fallacy. It is normal to feel a slight heat or tingling sensation. Some parts of the body are more sensitive than others but adjustments can be made by the Electrologist to provide a comfortable treatment.

What areas should not have hair removed?

Only with a physician's approval can hair in moles or birthmarks be removed.

Is work noticeable whilst being done?

Immediately following a treatment there is normally a slight redness and swelling. This will only last a short time.
